COURSE REQUIREMENTS

Instructional / Methods / Activities Assessments

COURSE PLAN:

1. Assigned task for each of the learning modules.
2. Critical review of two recent dissertations completed in the EDL department and one from another university. The review will focus only on the perceived strengths and weaknesses of the dissertations. The studies themselves will not be detailed. You will be able to go online to the library database to Dissertations and search for dissertations whose major professors were from SHED or the EDL department and online for other university dissertations.
3. Development and preparation of a complete dissertation proposal in scheduled segments.
4. Trial defenses of proposals with class critique.
5. Remediation of writing skills, as needed.
6. Regular and prompt attendance online for assignments.
7. Contact with the instructor and/or students online.

GRADING

The following criteria will be utilized for student evaluation:

Attendance, participation in class discussion, and trial defenses

- Dissertation presentations
- Proposal: Introduction & Significance

- Proposal: Hypotheses/Research Questions and Method of Procedure
- Proposal: Title, Table of Contents, Statement of Problem, Purpose Statement,
- Definition of Terms, Limitations and Delimitations, Basic Assumptions,
- Organization of Dissertation Chapters, and References
- Proposal: Completion of an IRB application
- (All six factors will be calculated equally.)

Each step of the evaluation will be determined by the student's input. A minimum expectation of graduate study is the self-motivated continuing search for information/understanding. The following should serve as guidelines:

Demonstration of continuous efforts for more learning	A
Demonstration of willingness to accept a level of learning without consistent effort	B
Demonstration of satisfaction with the minimum effort/lack of initiative	C
