Course description:

This course teaches you how to ask questions. Our course is a bold examination into the reality of the human condition. Covid-19 has jolted us out of our taken-granted routine. But what does it reveal about us? Are we subject to the swerve of circumstances and vicissitudes of nature or is there a special and redemptive place for human beings in the universe? Through a jaunt of what we can characterize as philosophical, existential, and "plague" literature we will ask these questions.

Learning objectives: This course will provide experiences for students to work on (1) close reading and enhancement of reading skills by carefully considering primary text materials, (2) engage in intensive writing exercises by writing short explications of texts, providing peer-to-peer feedback, and revising all writing assignments, and (3) participate in high-level discussion through explication of text, critical questions, and peer discussion.

Required texts:

Albert Camus, Plague:

Cormac McCarthy, The Road:

Journal 15% Explications 30% Peer Assessment 20% Midterm 15% Final Exam 20%

Journal: You will keep a journal throughout the course. It can include: Your reading notes/class notes/question that arise during or after class/study notes. See this helpful website: http://new.math.uiuc.edu/netgeom/advice/howto-journal.html

Reading Assignments: You must read the assignment material in advance of each class. Each class session, the instructor will announce how much material students should read. Although this course does not have a heavy reading load students are expected to read every line of the text carefully. In addition, students take a primary role in class discussion.

Writing Assignments: You will write in class responses, and must also write 4, 1.5-2 page (double spaced) critical explication of text that addresses a key problem in the reading. Although these assignments are short they are significantly more intense. An explication of text is not a summary or a defense of your own opinion. It is rather an exploration of an important, puzzling question about the meaning of the text. You are free to write creatively as long as the essay is grounded in the text. I will model an explication and the review process in class.

All writing assignments are due before the start of the class. I will not accept late assignments. You must bring a hardcopy to class and also upload your revised papers to the TURNITIN lessons tab.

Mid-term and Final: The mid-term and final exam are take home comprehensive questions.

Peer-Review: You will be asked to work in pairs throughout the session as a peer reviewer, rotating among peers for each assignment. Your job is twofold. You will comment on your peers writing assignment by: asking questions about the paper, suggesting points to revise, and being specific in your comments. You will comment and then discuss your comments with your peer. Your task is to help your fellow peer write for a reader and not for himself/herself or for the teacher. It is important to be polite in this exercise but also frank. As a class, we will model the peer review process, in which the class will review the instructor's explication.

Weekly Schedule:

Will be uploaded to D2L on August 24
