Course Description

This course covers selected seminal works in the historiography of the Mexican Revolution, which took place in stages, starting from 1910, when civil war broke out, and ended in 1940. The revolutionary process involved differing scales of rebellion and violence, leading to enormous changes in society, education, culture, and perceptions of national identity. The Revolutionary governments of Mexico also brought forth dramatic economic change and an aggressive--some would say obsessive--push toward modernity. By classic scholarly definitions, it was, in fact, a revolution. But for many Mexicans today, the early promise of the Revolution and post-World War II economic prosperity gave way to institutionalized and authoritarian corruption and endemic social and economic inequality. We will exam negative and positive aspects of the Revolutionary period, and critically examine major works which shaped and influenced scholarly interpretations of it. The course includes both older and newer interpretations, regional studies, and postmodernist influences on Revolutionary historiography.

The syllabus/schedule are subject to change.

Student Learning Outcomes

1. By the end of this semester, students will understand important currents of scholarship pertaining to the Mexican Revolution, including aspects of class, gender, economics, and religion. They will have the ability to formulate their own historiographical analyses on these or related themes of the Revolution.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

Minimal Technical Skills Needed

Microsoft Word

Instructional Methods

During the semester, each student will for each book write reviews of 3-4 pages. We will discuss each of the monographs assigned for class, and in some cases take an extra week for a particular book. Students lead class discussions in a rotating schedule. Students will send the instructor one question on research or mythology by 5 p.m. on Tuesday, the day of class. I will utilize these for our discussions. The semester project is a paper of at least 18-20 pages on the historiography of Mexico (1910-1940); themes can vary (gender, militarism, politics, ethnicity, and others). Any historiographical topics that fall outside the time frame of the Mexican Revolution need instructor approval.

Student Responsibilities or Tips for Success in the Course

Examples include: Regularly logging into the course website, amount of weekly study and participation time expected, etc.
